Government can spend millions or billions expanding freeways, building rail, or buying buses. But a logical, simpler way to reduce the number of cars on the road is to make it easier for people to share them. The majority of cars that clog our roads in the morning, and then again in the evening, are left completely unused in the middle of the day. In addition to supporting mass transit, bike riders, and pedestrian-friendly policies, help Honolulu residents make more efficient use of some of the cars we have on our crowded island.
